CLEANING PROCESS TO BEGIN

After nearly six hours of coaxing, drilling and heaving, the Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet and Alice Cogswell Statue was lifted by crane from its base to the plaza area in front of Chapel Hall where the cleaning process will take place. A team of conservators headed by Phoebe Dent Weil of Washington University, St. Louis, Missouri, begin work on Wednesday.

Ms. Weil explained to those watching the move that the cleaning process involves blasting the statue with tiny glass beads smaller than grains of salt which will remove all the encrustation and corrosion. It is this corrosive build up which gives the statue its green color and is slowly eating away at the underlying bronze.

Following the cleaning, the statue will be treated chemically to provide an even, dark brown coloration which is it's original color. Researchers who are authorities on the work of Daniel Chester French believe it is how the sculptor intended the statue to look since he chose brown sandstone for its base. Finally, the statue will receive a protective coating of plastic which will slow down the corrosion process. The statue will be retreated at regular intervals by the College.

The statue is scheduled to leave next week for New York City for the opening of the Daniel Chester French Exhibit. Before it leaves the College will have a bon voyage party for Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet and Alice on October 19, from 3-5 p.m. The College community is invited.

AMONG OURSELVES

--Carl Kirchner takes to the road this month with workshops on total communication. On October 7 and 8, he presented one to the New York State Educators Association. Following the workshop, Suzie Kirchner and Dennis Cokely joined Carl for an evening of poetry, storytelling and song at the New York State School for the Deaf.

--This weekend, Esther Nelson and Michael Miller will be attending the Mountain Interstate Foreign Language Conference in Blacksburg, Virginia, on the Virginia Polytechnic Institute campus. Michael will also be giving a talk in Spanish to the Club De Las Americas of Washington, D.C., on October 21. He will discuss Gallaudet College and its history, the history of deaf education in Spain and the teaching of Spanish at Gallaudet.

--Brenda Maiers and Victor Galloway are attending the National Bicentennial Conference on Vocational Education sponsored by the National Advisory Council on Vocational Education which is being held in Minneapolis this week.
